This sixth grade creative writing effort was part of "Nanowrimo," the national novel writing month that takes place every November. Because of the students' very full schedules, the project was postponed and students spent a number of days preparing (developing characters, and planning plot, etc) then wrote as much as possible for 30 consecutive days beginning in February. The stories were then edited by the high school creative writing students as part of the Mount Madonna School buddies program. This compilation brings together all of their hard work, including their art, into a book with assorted tales of intrigue, murder, sorcery and friendship.
