In the author's own words, "I'm disturbed by the alienation of modern living: the feeling of being separate from every other person, even as we share bus seats, office space, sidewalks, apartment buildings, stories. We shop for groceries at the same kinds of stores, drive the same kinds of cars, and complain about the same TV shows, yet there is little interaction or interest. Through my poetry, I hope to illuminate the places of intersection between seemingly separate lives by focusing on shared experiences, like teaching a young child how to ride a bike. I want readers to think, "I'm human, and the character in this poem is human, and I can relate to what he or she is going through." Empathy. That's the goal." Joseph Millar, award-winning author of three poetry collections, said, "These poems are full of grit and spit. I admire their clean language and well-made lines and the honesty of this fresh new voice, unabashedly brash and brave, unabashedly female. Janelle Rainer doesn't hold back."
