A guide to Chicago's commemorative honors. The who, where, when, and why of honorary streets, days, and other recognitions. Who or what is a WOOGM and why is there a Chicago alley named for it? This is the question I asked myself one summer day more than a decade ago as I looked up at the brown background and white letters signs flanked with four white stars. What are all these brown honorary signs around the city; and who are these people, places and things being honored? Why was July 28, 2013 Chaka Khan Day in Chicago? Who was Abraham Lincoln Marovitz? My curiosity became a quest for the answer. I have created the most complete compilation of honorary streets, days, tributes and congratulations, for the Honorary Chicago series. Discover what makes Chicago "the world's largest small town." This book is organized by neighborhood can be used as a tour book of Chicago's honorary streets, it contains additional historical and biographic information regarding honorary days and commemorations. This edition represents only a fraction of what I have developed for the Honorary Chicago record. There are far more points on the maps than are included in the book and that some of the signs, buildings, locations, and landmarks no longer exist. All are chronicled by Honorary Chicago, lest they be lost to history – again. Proceeds from this book will help support further research and updates.
